However, the feedback also sheds light on areas that warrant attention and improvement. While there is overall satisfaction with the availability of reference materials, there is room for enhancement, suggesting a need for continuous updates to align with the evolving curriculum.

Furthermore, concerns related to the freedom of teaching and assessment methods indicate an opportunity for more open and adaptable teaching approaches.

On a positive note, the feedback underscores satisfactory aspects such as timely scheduling of tests and examinations, sufficient books in the library, and a positive environment for teaching and research. Nevertheless, attention is needed in certain areas, including providing separate space in the college canteen and maintaining cleanliness in washrooms. Addressing these specific points will contribute to a more enriched and conducive teaching and learning environment.
